Professor Joshua Lederberg,
Department of Genetics,
Stanford University Medical School,
Palo Alto,
California,
U.S.A.

22nd February, 1968.

Dear Professor Lederberg,

The Sunday Times Magazine is planning an entire issue on molecular biology in the very near future and I understand you gave a Lecture to the American Society of Genetics at Stanford University late in 1967 on this subject in which you mentioned many biological implications of present day molecular biology.

We wondered if you have a copy of this Lecture we could see or whether it has been published in any form readily available. Also, are there any useful references you could recommend to us that we could obtain speedily.

We do realise that you may want to edit your Lecture before letting us see it, but the material is required basically for research, so any help you can give us would be greatly appreciated.

Yours sincerely,

Murray Sayle.
Features Editor.
